

R. Kocak | 4436814

Fieldwork observations Elderly have little to no (social) activity Elderly stay close to home or do not go out at all The daily life of elderly is experienced as monotonuos, they don't have much to look forward to Elderly enjoy the social interaction with young people, but do not have much interaction within living environment Problemstatement Elderly are missing social interaction within the living environment, which makes them inactive and isolated from the society. How can architecture encourage and facilitate the social interaction between young & old in the living environment? Intergenerational living Social Interaction What are the benefits of an Interaction Architecture intergenerational living environment for the elderly? What is the How can Intergenerational living importance of social promote ageing in place? interaction? What are architectural What are types of resources to stimulate How can young and old mean social interaction? social interaction? something to each other? How can the living environment promote social interaction? Design guidelines Inspirational projects Site analysis Specific design guivdelines Design Concept