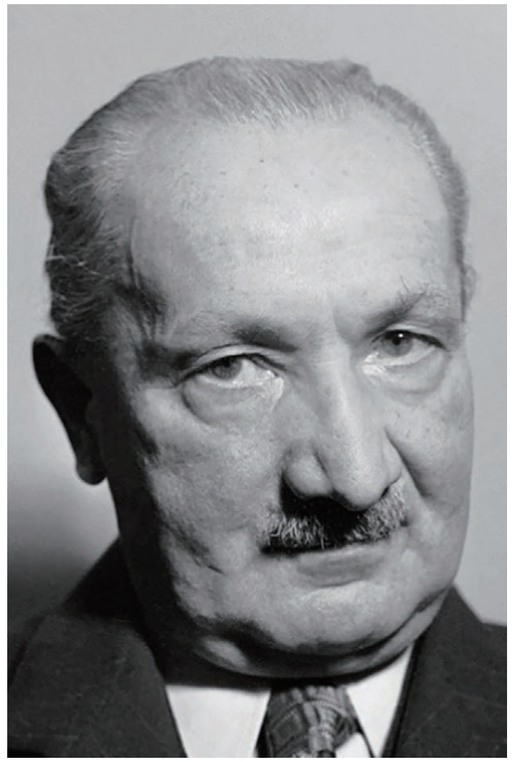
3.Bricolage in architecture scale



Thingness

An object becomes a thing when it can no longer serve its common function.

The particularity of things seems to depend completely on their space and time. Space and time are generated in the encounter between man and the things

What a "this" is does not depend upon our caprice and our pleasure. What "it" is does depend upon us, but “it" also equally depends upon the things

——Heidegger

thingness come from spetialization thingness help us to see it but still not intimate with us

Rene: definitely more people that already know us here. We’ ve already been here for 35 years. The advantage is that people already know it, the shop has a name for itself. You do notice that. But what it also means is when you do move, then people lose you. These group of people lose you. They’ ll stand here in front of an empty or an other shop and they won’ t make effort to go look for you. That is the danger of moving.

location is crucial

keep the same location

more possibility for interaction

The more abstract and ambiguous the identity of the subsystem is, the greater the potential it holds. But the absence of the stick's identity weakened the feeling of bricolage.
