

Architecture, city and guilt

A new mixed-use building in Zuidas including sex working spaces

Stefanos Natsis – Explore Lab

Architecture as an affective infrastructure can regulate (intensify, lessen or displace) guilt

“It matters little that Bloom can’t be held responsible for any of his acts: he remains nonetheless responsible for his own irresponsibility, which he is at every instant given the opportunity to declare himself against. Since he has consented, negatively at least, to being no more than the predicate of his own existence, he is an objective part of domination, and his innocence is itself pure guilt.”
